A: Yes, it's possible to do that using the keepass 2 password vault and the openvpn script. We've used something like this to build a public wireless network for a coworking space with the synergy software and the openvpn script running on a server in the network. The server will act as a gateway and all the devices connected to it will have their computers connect to it through the openvpn virtual private network. To put it in a nutshell, the idea is this: A user connects to the server with the openvpn client The openvpn client will connect to a hidden server with the openvpn server (the server that you install the openvpn software on) The openvpn server will send a keepass 2 password vault to the openvpn client The openvpn client will create a password to access the keepass 2 vault The openvpn client will connect to the keepass 2 vault The openvpn client will be pointed to the keepass 2 vault over the internet Keepass 2 vault can be found here. Openvpn can be found here. All you have to do is, of course, is configure the server properly. The only thing to do is change the default vpn port to the port you use for the openvpn client. Additionally, if you want to make the openvpn client connect to the openvpn server over the internet, use this IP address: OpenVPN server IP address: 192.168.0.1 (or whatever your server ip is) OpenVPN client IP address: 10.10.10.1 (or whatever your openvpn ip address is) Be sure to use a special local ip address if you're using an ip range instead of a static ip address. Also, you'll need to set up the configuration file properly. A: This is a relatively easy task that you can perform by yourself. You need to create a brand new OpenVPN server on one of the computers and install Keepass 2 Password Manager on it as well (though you can find many excellent and free alternatives in the Google Play Store). After that, go to the cyber cafe and connect your clients (RaspBerry Pi, for example) and point their computer's internet connection to this OpenVPN server. Then, configure all your clients to automatically reconnect to the f678ea9f9e
